

Placed-based pedagogy and multicultural social justice education: The value of historical referents

Carl Grant

This paper argues that engaging students in a placed-based pedagogical experience; one that not only immerse students in local heritage, culture, landscapes and the economy for example, but also uses a multicultural social framing has more relevance for living in a global diverse society. In addition this paper claims that the use of historical referents promote student learning and self development.